China's biggest conglomerate Dalian Wanda Group Inc. said Monday that it will buy a majority stake in AMC Entertainment Holdings Inc. for $2.6 billion. The deal, which must still be approved by the antitrust authorities, will create the world's largest cinema chain. AMC's 7,000 screens are mostly in the U.S. with operations in South America and Asia. Although Beijing is growing increasingly assertive abroad, the sale is the first time that a Chinese company has bought a major Western business. Wang, a real estate and entertainment mogul, has a reputation as a driving force behind China's booming property market and its booming film industry. His Dalian Wanda Group is the country's second-largest private conglomerate, and its holdings are a mix of shopping centers, hotels and theaters. China is the biggest foreign buyer of Hollywood films, spending $4 billion last year. In 2013, Dalian Wanda bought the Legendary Entertainment studio, which produced Hollywood blockbusters like "The Hangover" and "Pacific Rim." That studio has produced six more films in the past two years and is working on a superhero movie starring Chinese actor Jackie Chan and an adaptation of "The Great Wall" by best-selling author Terrence Holt. Wang has more than 1 billion yuan ($160 million) in cash and has been trying to diversify away from property. The deal would mark his second foray into the U.S. market, where he owns the AMC Theater in Beijing, as well as a small number of luxury movie theaters in Shanghai. Amusement companies account for about 20
