To evaluate specific humoral and cellular immune responses in persons exposed to soils from the Three Mile Island (TMI) nuclear facility, human lymphocytes were isolated from the blood of eight persons who worked at the TMI site in 1979-1984. The study population was compared with two groups of controls: (1) persons who had been employed at the site up until 1986 but who were not exposed to radiation during the period of interest and (2) persons who worked at the site and were exposed to radiation in 1984 and 1985. Antibody responses to recall antigens, such as tetanus and diphtheria toxoids, keyhole limpet hemocyanin and candida, were measured by immunofluorescence (IF) and enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA). Cellular responses to recall antigens were measured by assays for proliferative response, antigen-induced cytokine expression and microbicidal activity. The response of serum antibody to a toxoid antigen was elevated in the group of workers exposed to radiation compared with the controls. Cellular responses were not consistently altered in workers who were exposed to radiation at the time of study.Q: How do I align multiple row elements in a table to the left How do I align the "Nieuw" and "Arriving"?
