The intracranial olfactory pathways in the rat were examined after a retrograde transport of horseradish peroxidase (HRP) was applied by iontophoresis or pressure injection in various regions of the olfactory bulb. The terminal fields of olfactory and vomeronasal afferents were labeled in the ipsilateral anterior and posterior olfactory nuclei, nucleus of the lateral olfactory tract, medial nucleus of the amygdala, the amygdaloid complex and the ventral division of the ventral pallidum. Olfactory afferents innervated the lateral division of the ventral pallidum and piriform cortex. The olfactory tubercle, nucleus accumbens and external and internal globus pallidus were unlabeled. The labeled fibers were concentrated in the ventral pallidum and piriform cortex and in the lateral division of the ventral pallidum. Within the amygdala the olfactory afferents supplied several groups of cells, the largest of which extended to the lateral, dorsal, and accessory basal nuclei. The terminals were distributed mainly in the lateral nucleus and the lateral magnocellular subnucleus. In addition, there were also labeled fibers in the central, medial, and cortical nuclei, and in the accessory basal nucleus. The vomeronasal afferents terminated in the anterior, central, and lateral nuclei of the amygdala. The largest group of vomeronasal afferents was found in the medial nucleus, in addition, several groups of fibers were seen in the cortical, accessory basal, and lateral nuclei. The commissural nucleus, subcommissural nucleus, and central gray matter were unlabeled 2d92ce491b
