Stellar and Ripple are approaching USD1 per unit. It is only a matter of time - jmartens ===== tzs It's interesting how the three leading cryptocurrencies are all named after words ending in an ex, with Stellar being named after a word ending in a pharmacy--which is a normal thing to do when naming something. Another thing to note, from this blog post: radar/cryptocurrency-naming-ex-po... (also cited in the article): "The cryptocurrency's name was chosen because it shares the root of 'stellar', which is Latin for 'steady'." Which suggests that the whole idea of a cryptocurrency being "Stellar" might be an intentionally chosen coincidence. And/or it might be an unintentional coincidence. ~~~ tzs I thought I'd reply to myself, since I got carried away when I was responding to the article and posted way more than I expected. > And/or it might be an unintentional coincidence. Isn't that the definition of "coincidence"? // DO NOT EDIT THIS FILE - it is machine generated - c++ -- #ifndef __gnu_java_awt_peer_gtk_GtkPixbufImage__
