"Why," you ask? Because we want profile pages to have freedom of customization, but also to have some consistency. This way, when anyone visits a deviant, they know they can always find the art in the top left, and personal info in the top right. Activity As you might have already know I've finally started to work on Garter Stories, this comic I've been telling about for quite a long time. I'm planning to release it on February 1st, so I think now is the perfect moment to share the first story I've worked on. This one is named "The Rusty Candlestick", it's the first part of a trilogy of stories I'm making, so I can't reveal anything about the others, except that the characters are the same as in "The Rusty Candlestick" and "The Golden Stag", but I think they're gonna be more different from the first two than the first two were from each other. The Rusty Candlestick The Rusty Candlestick The Rusty Candlestick So, you want me to continue with this story? Because I think you guys are gonna love it! The Rusty Candlestick "Greetings!" she said, "my name is Tess, I'm a witch." She was a pretty woman, but she wasn't pretty today. Her face was twisted with rage, her long hair tangled in a mess and her beautiful gown dirty. Tess was standing in front of him, demanding him to tell her what she had done wrong. "Tell me why I'm being punished!" she said. "We don't want to punish you, Tess, but you're not allowed in Fasciocutaneous flaps for reconstruction of the lower extremity. Although the fasciocutaneous flap has been the mainstay of lower extremity reconstruction, newer flaps, such as the inferior femoral circumflex artery perforator flap, the superficial circumflex iliac artery perforator flap, and the gastrocnemius muscle-based perforator flap, have become popular for distal leg and foot reconstruction. Although these newer flaps are not as ubiquitous in the literature as the fasciocutaneous flap, they can be used in a similar fashion and for similar indications. The lower extremity is not an ideal anatomic site for free flaps because of the limited length of subdermal tissue and the various anatomic structures that have no clear fascial covering. The fasciocutaneous flap is a useful option for the reconstructive surgeon, especially in areas where there is a need for thin, pliable coverage and in areas in which a free flap is not a favorable choice. The authors review the applications, modifications, and advantages of the fasciocutaneous flap for lower extremity reconstruction.

CBS Interactive Inc. shares fell 2.8 percent, in the biggest intraday decline in more than two years, after the digital media company's ad revenues for the last quarter missed analysts' estimates and the company forecast revenue for the full year to be weaker than expected.

Investors were also concerned that CBS Interactive's core digital properties, which include the website of the New York Times, displayed fewer people viewing content than expected for the period, and that the company's ad revenues were soft.

The stock has gained nearly 17 percent since the company's $6.2 billion acquisition of an online real estate search business from Realtor.com. Shares were up 2.5 percent at $54.75 in morning trading on the New York Stock Exchange.
