Glucose-dependent protein kinase (GK) is a cAMP-independent protein kinase. In recent years, GK has been found to regulate cAMP-dependent phosphorylation events. The effects of GK on the cAMP-dependent phosphorylation of some membrane systems have been characterized. The present study was designed to investigate whether GK could also affect the phosphorylation of a phospholipase C system. The phospholipase C-catalyzed hydrolysis of phosphatidylinositol-4,5-bisphosphate was strongly stimulated by adenosine 3',5'-monophosphate in a time and dose-dependent manner. GK enhanced the hydrolysis by increasing the initial rate of the reaction. The effect was concentration-dependent and maximal at 1 nM GK. GK also stimulated the hydrolysis 2d92ce491b
