Enlarge this image toggle caption Andrew Harrer/Bloomberg/Getty Images Andrew Harrer/Bloomberg/Getty Images Social Security is under attack from multiple fronts in the presidential campaigns. At least one of the candidates says he wants to privatize the system, and a few others are calling for the U.S. to follow the model of the private pension system in Chile. The Republican candidates have even called for a commission to study proposals to change Social Security. The U.S. may be the only advanced economy in which citizens rely heavily on government to support them in their old age. The percentage of old folks on Social Security is growing and looks set to reach historic proportions in a few years. The fight over Social Security has pitted the vast majority of Americans against a new generation of Republican politicians who call themselves "tea party" conservatives. The party leaders are warning the public not to get too happy about the system. Social Security is nearly ind
