Field of the Invention The instant invention pertains generally to herbicide application devices and more specifically to herbicide spraying devices including a first cyclonic element followed by a second cyclonic element that is attached to a telescoping handle. b. Description of the Prior Art Heretofore, there have been a number of different ways to apply herbicide to a field. One of the most popular ways to apply herbicide is to use a sprayer. Sprayer apparatus include a tank for holding a volume of herbicide. A piston and cylinder pump is used to discharge the herbicide from the tank to a manifold that is connected to a plurality of discharge nozzles. The pump is operated to discharge the herbicide through the nozzles. An example of a conventional sprayer is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 3,945,261, issued Mar. 23, 1976. Another example of a conventional sprayer is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,618,062, issued Oct. 21, 1986. These sprayers also include a handle connected to a telescoping tube and are well known in the art. It has been found that it is possible to achieve superior results when applying herbicide if the sprayer nozzle is a combination of a standard single or double stem nozzle with a cyclone immediately downstream of the nozzle. More specifically, the standard single or double stem nozzle has a relatively small orifice at the end of a large stem and the cyclone has a relatively large orifice at its downstream end. When the herbicide is discharged from the standard stem nozzle, the force of the outflow tends to induce a cyclonic movement of the liquid as it passes through the stem. The cyclone provides a large inner surface that causes a higher fluid velocity and thus further cyclones the herbicide. Accordingly, the application rate is far more uniform and the herbicide is generally more quickly absorbed
