Q: Do household items need insurance while being used in a commercial enterprise? I'm considering getting an insurance policy for my personal use items like a bicycle, laptop, snowboard, skateboard, camera, cellphone, surfboard, etc. Are these items considered business property? Will I need to get an insurance policy if I use them in a business enterprise? A: Yes, personal use items such as these are covered under your homeowner's policy. You don't need to have your homeowner's policy in order to use them in your business, however; you can use them in your business without a separate policy. However, you may want to consider replacing them with business-specific items if you decide to go into business. The advantages of having business-specific items include saving money by purchasing the same item twice, and the fact that many merchants will want to see proof of business use as part of your application, especially if it's a big purchase. With that said, it sounds like your best bet is to get the insurance you need for your personal items and then find a business-use alternative. A: There are a lot of factors to take into account when looking to insure your personal items. The most obvious way is to purchase Business Personal Property Insurance (BPPI) through a licensed agent (not the same as a broker) where the agent will review your situation, and make recommendations to purchase the appropriate policy. Additionally, you can insure yourself at the same time as you insure your business (known as Dual Coverage); a detailed discussion of the benefits of Dual Coverage and how to find an agent who will provide it can be found here. You may also find it worthwhile to check your state's regulations for how you are supposed to insure your personal items. Some states require that you have some form of specific insurance (BPPI, Dual Coverage, Commercial Auto, Business Interruption, etc.) to insure your personal items, or you may be able to insure them at
