Wednesday, February 26, 2007 Central Transport Union (CTU) President Stewart Connolly says the upgrade of roads to Auckland's CBD has been a wasteful and expensive exercise, costing $1 billion and leaving car drivers "stuck in traffic congestion". Noting the plan has been in the pipeline since 2002, Mr Connolly says that even with the construction of new roads, the city continues to be choked with traffic. "The biggest problems are traffic congestion on the weekend, people moving around too little and the lack of suitable public transport," he said. "In the wider Auckland area, there is less congestion on the highways and roads that have been built, but the city still has huge problems, including the poky and often dangerous shops," Mr Connolly said. "New Zealanders should not pay $40 billion for a city that is not all they hoped it would be. This is a total waste of money." He added the project was a white elephant in waiting. "This is Auckland's biggest transport white elephant and it should be scrapped. Unless new thinking is put into Auckland's transport plans, we could be stuck with decades of traffic congestion." The Waikato Times has the full story here. Another article about the project can be found here. Update on the ablation catheter. The majority of patients undergoing ablation of atrial fibrillation are elderly or have structural heart disease. Of importance, procedural success can be compromised by concomitant renal, pulmonary, and coronary artery disease, which are themselves risk factors for postprocedural thromboembolic complications. Although catheter ablation has assumed a prominent role as first-line therapy, clinical experience with ablation of atrial fibrillation has yet to fulfill all of its potential. In this article, recent advances in the field of catheter ablation are reviewed,
