I followed every instruction. The only thing i didn't do is signing the app using the push ID as I don't know how to do it. I just want to use the button and I can't login A: The only thing i didn't do is signing the app using the push ID as I don't know how to do it. I just want to use the button and I can't login What you have done is to sign the app using your real email and password. What you need to do is sign the app using your android Push ID as explained in this documentation. To get a Push ID from your Android app: Open the console on a device for which you would like to register for notifications. Select the Targeting section, then tap on APIs and Services. In the Provider section, tap on the Android option and select Device Services. The Android Console will now show a list of all device registrations. Choose the device you would like to enable push notifications for. Click Save changes. A new item will appear in the list called Android service APN. Copy and paste the new APN string into the Firebase console on your web app. After following the above, your Firebase project setup would be in the below image: Q: Understanding of disjoint union of sets I have a question on the definition of disjoint union of sets. I have problem in understanding that why $x \in A_i$ is not equivalent to $x \in A_j$. Let $A_1, A_2, \ldots, A_n$ be a sequence of sets. Then the disjoint union of the sets $A_1, \ldots, A_n$ is the set $

If by any chance you're unhappy with your computer's current OS desktop organization/management options, or you're simply looking for an alternative or complementary taskbar-like feature, then it might be worth checking out the wide variety of app launchers out there. One such application is WinLaunch which, as its straightforward name suggests, provides you with quick access to your most important files, folders, and applications from anywhere on the desktop. Here are some of the most obvious pros and cons Subsequent to its surprise-free installation, the first thing that becomes apparent is the app's looks, which, truth be told are not its strong point. While we're on the subject, it's worth mentioning that WinLaunch won't take home the prize for the most feature-packed Windows launcher either. Consequently, the app doesn't come with support for both web or system searches, nor does it allow you to perform calculations or even the possibility of grouping shortcuts. On the upside, however, "tipping the scales" at somewhere well under 2 MB, it's definitely one of the most lightweight apps of this sort out there. Also on the plus side of things, the app offers a decent amount of customization options. Hum-drum Windows launcher application for the masses From the main menu, make your way to the Launcher Properties window (by right-clicking the main interface), where you're presented with the configuration possibilities. For instance
