Development of the sensory epithelium in the cochlea. The development of the sensory epithelium in the cochlea was examined with light and electron microscopy from fetal day 17 to adult day 13. At 17 days, vascular spaces in the stria vascularis were first identified. The first sensory neurons were detected between the two rows of hair cells at approximately 20 days. Neurites of these neurons extended to the hair cells by 30 days. At 35 days, fine filaments were seen in the cuticular plate and tectorial membrane. At this time, the cuticular plate was easily removed from the sensory hair cells. At approximately 40 days, the membrane containing the neurons and their processes disappeared and the supporting cells extended slender processes along the membrane of the sensory hair cells. Electron microscopy revealed that the hair cells consisted of tightly packed tall, cylindrical, electron-dense cells and large, light, electron-transparent cells that resembled supporting cells. Neurites and growth cones were present in the space between the hair cells and the supporting cells. The sensory hair cells were attached to them by long plaques of an electron-dense matrix and continuous basal laminae. Hair cells were covered by a finger-like dome of cupula-like structures, the sensory receptors. From 35 to 47 days, a small number of hair cells were lost
