Create an 8½" × 11" (21cm × 27.9cm) full-bleed image using Acrobat® and save it as a JPG. 2. Add a gradient overlay to create a gradual fill-in for the image. 3. Select a brush and paint a gradient using the gradient tool, making sure to deselect each anchor point as you go. 4. Create a light circular mask using the shape tool and using a soft round brush. 5. Paint a delicate swatch of color on the mask with an airbrush. 6. Copy, paste, and move the brush swatch to create a variety of soft hues. 7. Paste the swatch on top of the main image using the Move option from the Window menu. Use the Direct Selection tool to move the swatch around. 8. Blend the swatch onto the main image by using the options found in the Gradient Overlay dialog box. 9. Paint a variety of strokes to highlight the petals using the Pen tool. 10. Blend the strokes. 11. Make the image black and white using a Curves Adjustment layer. 12. Reduce the layer opacity to 50%. 13. Select and copy a portion of the image and paste it onto a new layer. 14. Resize the layer so that a smaller version of the original appears in the frame. 15. Add an adjustment layer to increase the contrast and decrease the brightness. The adjustment layer should be placed between the top and bottom layer in the image. 16. Reduce the opacity to 30%. # Chapter 4: Intermediate Cardiac output measured using the aortic blood-pool method correlated well with cardiac index measured using the Fick method in children with ventricular septal defects: A retrospective study. We investigated the feasibility of measuring cardiac output in children with ventricular septal defects using the aortic blood-pool method (ABPM) and its correlation with cardiac index (CI) measured by the Fick method. Between April 2014 and January 2016, a total of 70 patients with ventricular septal defects (33 male and 37 female; mean age,  $5.2 \pm 5.0$  years; range, 1-18 years) who were divided into three groups according to age (group 1:
