Numerous publications, patents and patent applications are cited throughout the specification in order to describe the state of the art to which this invention pertains. Each of these citations is incorporated herein by reference as though set forth in full. Noroviruses (NoV) are members of the newly proposed genus, Caliciviridae, in the Caliciviridae family, and have been considered as agents of calicivirus, Norovirus GII. Infect Dis Clin North Am 1999; 13:517-529).

While the NoV genome is similar in general organization to that of the other caliciviruses, such as human enteric caliciviruses, human and animal NoV can be further divided into at least three distinct genogroups (AG I-III).

Norovirus genomes are approximately 7500 nt in length, have a 5' nontranslated region (NTR), a 3' NTR, and contain a single open reading frame (ORF) flanked by 5' and 3' NTRs. The 5' NTR is 200-300 nt in length and is important for the initiation of both viral RNA translation and replication. The 3' NTR, approximately 300-500 nt in length, is also important in replication, and in turn, is used as a primer in reverse transcription of the genomic plus-sense viral RNA. The coding region of the ORF (ORF1) encodes a viral nonstructural polyprotein, while the ORF2 encodes a capsid protein. Human NoVs have been found to be the causative agents of sporadic acute gastroenteritis in children, young adults and immunocompromised individuals, as well as foodborne epidemic gastroenteritis, including winter vomiting disease and Norwalk-like viruses (NLVs) that are transmitted in a faecally contaminated food chain. Two NoV genotypes, genogroup I (GI, formerly GI.1) and genogroup II (GII), have been found to predominate
