Business. Investment. Growth. Barack Obama The Press: Photo Op with Today's Edition Thursday, November 8, 2009 President Obama today addressed the nation about the unprecedented financial crisis we have been facing as a result of their reckless fiscal policies that have resulted in the rapid escalation of our huge debt and mortgage bubble that started in 2001. What happened in this news conference is surprising, to say the least. Here is the President being interrupted by a female protester who starts to shout at the President and Obama reacts. This came as a complete surprise to the President, who like most Americans probably hadn't seen this kind of "advanced" protester before. The only explanation for it comes from Obama's almost total exposure to TV news coverage, which are almost entirely controlled by conservative media. It is highly unlikely that there is a crisis in the nation. We also have a stable financial system, as well as a much more effective government and large enough federal reserve system to handle any fallout, which is more of the problem. Obama's handling of this crisis has so far been quite amazing, especially when compared with the handling of the far bigger crisis of the ever-expanding war-machine in Iraq. We are not at war, yet the President has become the defacto leader of a very effective and aggressive empire, and almost his only role is to show up for the photo ops. Unfortunately, with the steady escalation of the war-machine that has become the crown jewel of an ineffective and rather corrupt democracy, he is now receiving far more sustained scrutiny from the media and government for his misstatements or to lesser extent, omissions of the truth. While he remains one of the two most powerful people in the country, he now has to more and more get by on bluffing or downright lying to the American people, as most of the public now demands real answers. This means that his power is less effective. This is not meant to argue that there isn't a crisis in the U.S. and the world. We are engaged in a risky, reckless and overall dangerous game with our power to destroy people and countries in the real world. But the war-machine has become the focus of the nation and the media. I am sure the President wishes it weren't so, but he is engaged in a desperate and losing battle with a force that has a lot of influence and a much
