Photoshop's Layers The first principle of Photoshop is that you should not work on the entire image at once. Instead, you work on a layer mask, and then apply the finished effect to several layers in a new Photoshop file. You place the new layers inside of the existing Photoshop file (rather than adding a new file), then delete the original layers from the main file. You can then change the filename and save the new file. This technique, called "Layer Masks," is a powerful tool for enhancing and altering images. An example will help to explain the layer mask concept. Suppose you have a file with the following layers: Applying a filter to the top layer will create a warped photo. At this point, the most essential thing to do is save a copy of the file with a layer mask over the top layer and save it in a new file. When you apply the same filter and save a file, it will look like this: Saving a new file, as described, opens a new file in the Photoshop file window; however, when you save this new file, Photoshop stores the layers in the background. The result of saving a file is to save a copy of the "Layers" in the "Gallery" called "Masks." Your original top layer remains in the "Masks" folder, as does the top mask layer. You can then apply a different filter or any effects to your new layers from the Gallery, or simply use the layers from the Gallery to work on various parts of your image. When you are finished

Adobe Photoshop Adobe Photoshop is a graphic designer's dream. Whether you're a designer, artist, or blogger, Photoshop is your go-to program to create great images and videos. It has been the industry standard for photo editing for over two decades. It's quite impressive how far Photoshop has come in such a short time. It was originally created in 1987 as what would later become known as Photoshop Elements. It was marketed as a better alternative to the competing Adobe Photo Editor. I will talk a bit more about it in this article. Adobe Photoshop is a macOS program that has always been expensive. It doesn't include a lot of important features like vector graphics and text editing, but it was once bundled with the consumer version of Photoshop. This is pretty much the only reason why it's so popular. I'll assume you have a pretty good understanding of the Photoshop program. Why use Photoshop Elements? In the past, the only reason to use Photoshop was to create high-resolution images. Photographers loved Photoshop because it gave them the power to create amazing images with more flexibility than other cheaper programs. In the past, it was hard to create large files. Some digital camera manufacturers worked with Adobe to make Photoshop compatible with their own cameras. Nowadays, we have RAW and RAW Converters. Photoshop Elements has a RAW converter too. If you create a lot of images, and you're planning to use them on print or web, Photoshop Elements will save you a lot of time. Since it isn't as powerful as Photoshop, you will need to spend less time on your designs to make your files look great. The only reason to use Photoshop for web and print is the feature that you can edit a vector image. If you use Photoshop Elements for print, you can still create these images. Adobe Photoshop Pro Adobe Photoshop Pro is the professional version of Photoshop. It is very expensive if you don't use it often. However, it gives you a lot more tools than Adobe Photoshop Elements. It has more features like text and vector editing, complex filters and more. You can use Photoshop as an intermediate program to work on advanced designs. This is a paid program that is available on both Mac and Windows. It's also available for cloud storage. Since Adobe Photoshop Pro is so advanced, it requires some training and experience to use. However, it's worth the effort. If you create Photoshop projects for a living, you should invest in this version 05a79ccff

Piping Time: The best time of the day to beat the heat Friday Jul 18, 2012 at 12:01 AM A new study has found the best time of the day to beat the heat Joseph Olson A new study published on the Mayo Clinic Proceedings Journal has found the best time of the day to beat the heat. The study examined the air temperature and humidity across the entire United States in order to map heat-health conditions. The study also looked at the temperatures inside and outside, as well as the humidity. "Our research shows that it is best to avoid heat waves when temperatures are lower outside than indoors, and that in most regions of the United States, the best time of the day to avoid heat-related health problems is in the morning, when the outdoor temperatures are cooler than inside," says the study's lead author, Dr. Steven Noll, from the Department of Preventive Medicine in the Mayo Clinic College of Medicine in Rochester, Minn. The study showed that during a heat wave, conditions are less favorable for avoiding health effects. "That does not mean it is impossible to fight off the heat in some regions, as it is still possible to have sufficient water, shade and air conditioning," he says. "However, people should know that going from being uncomfortably hot inside to being uncomfortably hot outside may lead to health problems," he says. The best time of the day to avoid heat-related illnesses is from noon to 3 p.m., when temperature and humidity is at its lowest, and temperatures inside the home are cooler than outdoors. During the hottest part of the day - noon to 3 p.m. - the difference in air temperature between the inside and outside of the house is the least favorable. This is because during this time, both the temperature and humidity are at their highest, making it hard to cool people down. As an alternative, people should use air conditioners or fans to keep themselves cooler, if available. "Even though the air conditioner will cool you down, it won't protect you from getting heat stroke if you are sweating too much," says Noll. "Instead, it is important to drink plenty of fluids." Q: Why is the error when I use this.params.get('user') different in this.get('params') and this.params? Why I get this error when I use this.get('params').user TypeError: undefined is not an object But if I use this.params.get('user') or this.params.user, it works fine. I'm struggling to figure out why. My Kibana My Kibana View my Index User: {[params.user]} {[params.user]} var user = K.context().user(); K.log(user); A: {[params.user]} is not parsed on its own, it is parsed by your template when your script runs. {[#each params]} {[#if this.type]} {[#if this.value]} {[this.value]} {[/if]} {[/if]} {[/each]} So since you haven't defined the this.type and this.value variables in the script section of your template, params.user is undefined, which is why you get your error. I'm not sure why this isn't what you want, but if you use this.params.user instead, your code will work. View my Index User: {[this.params.user]} {[this.params.user]}
