PAQ.Quantification of head movements associated with oro-facial pain in secondary school children. The aim of this study was to investigate the hypothesis that children with severe/persistent oro-facial pain have increased head movement compared to pain-free controls. Retrospective, descriptive analysis of 26 children (15 female, 11 male) with a clinical diagnosis of oro-facial pain and a control group of 20 age-matched pain-free children. Video recordings of head movements during a 5-minute silent videotape were assessed for head movements and the frequency of head movements were compared between groups. Neck, shoulder and/or jaw pain were reported by 18 children, recurrent headache by 8 children, flu-like symptoms by 1 child and 3 children had no obvious medical problem. The children with oro-facial pain had significantly higher levels of head movements compared to the controls (pThe unfortunate trigger for the outbreak of deadly conflict in Syria was the brutal suppression of the popular uprising by the Baath regime, which was achieved by the deployment of large conventional forces, backed by Russian weaponry. It was the brutal suppression of the uprising that forced the majority of opposition forces into the desperate embrace of the Islamic State. In an effort to staunch the flow of fighters from Libya, the U.S. and its European and Middle Eastern allies launched air strikes against the self-declared government of the National Transitional Council (NTC). These air strikes have been aimed primarily at Libyan government forces which have retreated to key cities. To be sure, the strategic aim of the air strikes has been to deal a body blow to the nascent Libyan state, weakening the national government and its military. There are three key reasons for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's targeting of Libyan government forces. First, the air strikes are a form of tactical retribution for the killing of the U.S. ambassador to Libya in February by Islamic State jihadists in Benghazi. Second, the goal of the air campaign is to

I've seen the following claim on Wikipedia: The Tsar Bomba has a power of 100 megatons (MT), which is the most powerful hydrogen bomb in the world. Is it true? Can anyone tell me when it went off? The Soviet Union had a record of 160MT (and a lot more JUPITER bombs); is this still the world's largest hydrogen bomb? A: For some information on the Tsar Bomba, check the Wikipedia page for it. It is generally agreed that the Tsar Bomba is the world's largest atomic bomb. I don't find that the claim you present is made. It was exploded on 30 October 1961. The isotopes of radioactive material that were made by the explosion were found to be released during 1963-1966 to the atmosphere. That is, it was not found to have been permanently put in storage and never used. EDIT: I did an image search for the section headings of the Tsar Bomba article on Wikipedia to see how it is written. I found the following: The Tsar Bomba has a power of 100 megatons (MT), which is the most powerful hydrogen bomb in the world. It might be easier for you to understand if you read this section twice. The Tsar Bomba is the world's largest atomic bomb. (This is the main point.) It has a power of 100 megatons (MT), which is the most powerful hydrogen bomb in the world. (This is the secondary point, and even a third.) A: Below is a table from wikipedia: The current world record is held by the US' thermonuclear test on July 16, 1964 at the Nevada Test Site, which released an explosion of an estimated yield of 56 MT, a device designated "MILITARY MOON RANGER" You'll find your question answered. You may also find an interesting answer to your question about the Tsar Bomba, what it looks like, and how many HE bombs fit into it here.
