.Q: jQuery index() method giving "undefined" on images I'm pulling in content from a JSON feed via AJAX and attempting to place it in a div. My issue is that index() on images coming from the feed are returning "undefined". When I hard-code the object index, it returns the index of the images on the page, which is clearly not what I want. I'm not too familiar with this API and such, so I'm probably missing something fairly simple. Any help would be greatly appreciated! JSON: [{"img":"http://dev.assets.intuit.com/images/vstar-logo-full.png","name":"Intuit"}] JavaScript: function loadImages() { $.ajax({ url: "", data: "type=html", dataType: 'json', success: function(data) { var $data = $(data); $data.each(function(i) { $('#result').append(" i.img.index()"); }); } }); } PHP: header('Content-Type: application/json'); $html = file_get_contents($url); $obj = json_decode($html); if($obj[type] == "html") {

pargodungan.org Canine tumours of the sublingual gland: a clinico-pathological study. The histology and ultrastructure of nine cases of sublingual gland tumours are described. These tumours comprised four pleomorphic adenomas, one myoepithelioma, two carcinomas, two ectopic salivary glands and a mesenchymal nodule. All pleomorphic adenomas contained ductal elements and basal cells which stained for periodic acid-Schiff and smooth muscle actin. An invasive component was found in one myoepithelioma, which stained for PAS and epithelial membrane antigen. One pleomorphic adenoma, one ductal carcinoma and one lymphoepithelial carcinoma revealed marked anisonucleosis of their nuclei. As two patients with pleomorphic adenomas had an initial relapse in the sublingual region, recurrence of this tumour needs to be further investigated by electron microscopy. Myoepitheliomas, although rare in canine glands, are occasionally found in the sublingual gland. The biphasic nature of myoepithelioma is supported by the presence of fibrous stroma of a myoepithelial cell type./*  This file is part of the CMaNGOS Project. A: There is no way to share a file to the filesystem. You need to make a server-side solution (recommended way). So you should create one, for example in PHP. On the server you check a request, get the last file that was shared and then serve the user that very file. Q: installing ruby zlib gem fails on ubuntu 12.04 While installing the gem 'zlib' an error was thrown. It shows D:\Sachin\RubyOnRails\myapp>gem install zlib Building native extensions. This could take a while... ERROR: Error installing zlib: ERROR: Failed to build gem native extension. D:\Sachin\RubyOnRails\myapp> is there any way to install ruby zlib gem on ubuntu 12.04? A: I had the same issue. I solved it by adding the ruby-zlib source to my "gem sources" file. gem sources -a If you are trying to install some ruby library, try to run: gem source -a Now it will ask you to choose which ruby version you want to use. You can choose any one from there. A: gem install zlib should work perfectly fine on rbenv (which I think is what you're using since you say 12.04) The CIA has been using personality profile data to target "soft coup" operations in the United States. This has been demonstrated by the manipulation of U.S. Congressmen. With the example of Guccifer 2.0 being the latest found example. A new version
