Why not be a governor?" But the series of bad decisions led to a career in business that has paid off handsomely. He's a successful property developer, owning a majority share in the Carlton-based Sprint Southpack Building Products. Mr. Carpenter's involuntary campaign is in the election year of 2001. He's running for vice president of Southpack, which manufactures hardwood flooring and gypsum board. Mr. Carpenter, who is an active member of the United States Gymnastics Association, is a prime example of the reverse of the "stereotype." Stereotypes tend to make people think of the inverse. At the gym, "steer" is the word that got Mr. Carpenter interested in politics. It means to convince others that a particular belief is wrong. With politics it's the opposite: try to convince others of a belief, even if you know it's right. Being a Liberal has changed Mr. Carpenter's life, especially in his business. "I've never sworn an oath, but I had to when I started dealing with government," he says. "I'd never even met a politician before I became involved in politics." The first political event that Mr. Carpenter attended was in 1979, just before George W. Bush became governor of Texas. That d0c515b9f4
