That was quick! Just three days after its initial announcement in October, Google has dropped the Pixel 2 and 2 XL, and the Pixel Buds, on its retail store shelves. The company announced in early October that it would be bringing the Pixel 2 and Pixel 2 XL to its retail locations, but the launch day was ultimately pushed back. Perhaps the company learned a lesson after letting the Pixel 2 launch for over a month without a new phone. In any case, if you're one of the many that ordered your Google Pixel 2 from Google's own retail store, you'll get the phone sometime next week. Google will surely be coming back to its online store soon, and it might take a few days before the Pixel 2 is back online again. The Pixel 2 is basically the same phone as last year's model — the only real difference being the addition of a single rear-facing camera. However, the changes in the hardware make the Pixel 2 feel a lot more like a true premium device, and the phone is available for $649 in a few different colors. If you don't feel like shelling out money for a brand new phone, though, Google now offers a couple of great deals on its previous-gen Pixel and Pixel XL phones. The Pixel 2 and 2 XL are priced at $99 and $129, respectively, with wireless deals on the Pixel 2 being available on Google's own Project Fi service and from Google Fi. Google Pixel and Pixel 2 deals: – The Pixel 2 and 2 XL are priced at $99 and $129 – The Pixel 2 and 2 XL are available for $50 off via Project Fi – Google Fi offers the Pixel 2 and 2 XL for $50 off – The Pixel 2 and 2 XL are available for $90 off via unlocked phones [Pharmacoeconomics of Diagnostic Imaging in Oncology]. Diagnostic imaging is a major component of oncological treatment, and includes a variety of imaging modalities. However, cost is one of the limiting factors in selecting which imaging modalities to order and which to avoid. Imaging has two basic components: time-consuming and costly procedures, which produce unwanted side effects, and time-saving procedures with known outcome, which are more expensive. In our analysis we combined the current data on the costs and benefits of imaging modalities with patient characteristics to construct a decision-analytic Markov model, which is an alternative to cost-minimisation modelling. Based on the results of our analysis, CT and MRI show the most potential to be cost-effective procedures, whereas specific investigations for anatomical staging, such as lymph-node excision, MRI of the CNS, and PET, have lower potential. The results of this modelling should be helpful in the selection of initial investigations and the use of imaging during treatment.

Relationship of C-reactive protein to lumbar bone mineral density. To determine the relationship between serum C-reactive protein (CRP) levels and lumbar bone mineral density (BMD) in men and women. An ambulatory, healthy study of adults 18 to 59 years old with normal body mass index. Thirty-nine participants, including 19 men and 20 women, had serum CRP measured and had lumbar spine and hip BMD measures by DXA. Serum CRP was correlated with lumbar spine and hip BMD. The BMD measures were adjusted for age, weight, race, and serum CRP. Serum CRP was correlated with lumbar spine BMD in women and with hip BMD in men. After adjustments for age, weight, race, and serum CRP, the geometric mean z score of lumbar spine BMD was 1.0 higher (95% confidence interval, 0.1 to 1.8) for each increase of 1 mg/L in CRP in women. In contrast, the geometric mean z score of hip BMD was 1.9 higher (95% confidence interval, 0.2 to 3.6) in men with each mg/L increase in CRP. Serum CRP levels are correlated with lumbar spine and hip BMD measures. CRP should be considered when estimating BMD in clinical and research settings.
