This is a real gem in the history of Browning, especially for the beginner reloader. It came about when William B. Browning, Jr. was asked to design a drum magazine for the Navy Colt, and he wound up designing a design which allowed the use of the same basic parts for a number of different 1911 and 1911-A1 guns. Browning's original Navy Colt magazines used a half-link, half-locking collar, but we have seen many examples with a full locking collar. While the original Navy Colt was chambered for the .38 S&W cartridge, it has recently been demonstrated that at least one Navy Colt loaded with .45 ACP rounds actually worked just fine.
